How to unlock a kenwood radio

From what I'm seeing, it only has a 4-character keypad, correct?posted by fogster at 6:33 PM on July 10, 2008 Do they work on one channel but nothing else, or do they not work on any channels?posted by fogster at 6:52 PM on July 10, 2008 Response by poster: Actually, the right arrow (the button on the extreme right) doesn't do anything when I press it. One of the buttons on the side below the PTT is just a backlight for the display, and the one below it squawks the radio.posted by C17H19NO3 at 6:52 PM on July 10, 2008 « Older That one little thing that can make all the... | Don't harpoon the beached whale! The question has sprung up as a result of some enhanced functionality on these walkies talkies. Kenwood radios have an integrated feature that allows the device to "super lock" Kenwood radios have received relative popularity for their modest price point, which manages to still deliver a solid build and reasonable reliability. Their commonly used amongst professionals to coordinate communication in teams. Superlocking - What Is It? Super locking your kenwood radio freezes all your settings and locks you in on a specific channel. It's designed to stop you accidentally changing settings by bumping into your buttons/knobs etc. When the device is 'super locked' and you attempt to change the channels - the device simply emits a "beep". This is pretty handy to prevent you accidentally veering off channel - but it can present some issues. If your team decides on using another channel to avoid interference, for example. If this happens to you and you can't unlock your device then you're not going to be able to initiate any kind of contact with your team. Accidentally changing channels can be a bit of a nuisance, wondering why no one's speaking to you or encountering interference you weren't previously encountering can impact your ability to be productive. Ironically, despite being integrated to prevent accidental settings changes - it's possible to accidentally lock your device. If you're currently encountering issues with the locking function on your kenwood radio, don't worry, the solution is at hand. If you also encounter an issue where your radio can't exit scanning mode (with the scanning indicator blinking green constantly) the same strategy applies for fixing it. But just before I dive in to how to fix this issue - it's probably important that you know how the issue has happened in the first place so you can avoid it again in future. How People Accidentally Activate Super Locking An array of Kenwood models with similar functionality all have the three recognizable side panel buttons. The button at the top is simply a push-to-talk button, press it down and you can speak into the mic and transmit instantaneously. Below this button is two smaller buttons for navigating the radio menu. Holding down the first side button for a period of more than three seconds will activate the super lock. Obviously this only works when the radio is powered-on. It's pretty easy for this to occur in your pocket or if you simply hold the button down too long, unaware of this feature. It's more common amongst people new to the device but this issue can creep up on you too. You can tell it's locked straight away because you won't be able to change the channel and it'll just beep at you when you use the knobs. How To Unlock Kenwood Handheld Radio Luckily, it's not too difficult to get yourself out of "locked" mode with your radio set. Switch your device off, then begin holding the SECOND side button down whilst powering ON the radio. The indicator light will begin to flash orange, this is when you release button two. Upon releasing button two you will hear two beeps to notify you that you've unlocked it. Turn the radio back off and reboot it normally and your radio can be unlocked from scan mode by simply pressing the first side button and promptly releasing it. From here you should be able to switch channels or turn the knob without being beeped at. Conclusion This little feature is pretty handy for preventing you from accidentally changing channels. Sadly, because there's no dedicated lock button and this lock can only be activated through holding a button down - it's not well known. As a result one of the most common issues users of the kenwood radio set encounter is the superlock issue. Unlocking isn't super intuitive either - you can't just hold the same button down for 3 seconds. You need to go through a series of steps. This could have been avoided with the inclusion of a dedicated superlock button instead of integrating the functionality into the other buttons. For its price point it is still a useful feature, but some time and energy definitely could have went in to making the feature a little bit more intuitive. The benefit is that you don't need to plug your radio into a computer and pre-program this functionality in to the device. It's also worth appreciating that superlock isn't some permanent feature and there is actually a way to get around the issue at home. How to unlock the Kenwood car stereo? First of all, look into the manual and warranty card of your radio for 4-character codes. If these codes don't work, try some common Kenwood codes like "KCAR", and "3015". If you are the second owner, ask the first one. And when nothing works, reach out to the Kenwood service center. These are some steps you can take when you have been locked out of your Kenwood radio.Look into the Box and CardsIf you are the first owner of the car radio and have forgotten the password, find its packaging and look at the radio's manual and warranty card. You need to carefully sift through them to find if there is any code mentioned there anywhere.If the manual or warranty card doesn't categorically mention the security code, jot down all the 4-character codes and serials mentioned there and try them one by one. You might succeed in unlocking your Kenwood radio through this trial and error exercise.Try Some of the Common Security CodesIf no code from the manual/warranty card works or you have lost the box and card, you need to run a trial and error with some of the common Kenwood security codes.For instance, "KCAR" has been the most common passcode for many Kenwood radio models. "3051" is another code that has been noticed in many Kenwood manuals.If it is a second-hand Kenwood radio, try some common 4-character passwords. Use "1235" or "abcd". You can also try the iterations like "aaaa", "bbbb", "1111", "2222", etc to try your luck. This video might also help you unlock your Kenwood model.Ask the Previous OwnerWith locked second-hand Kenwood radios, you can always reach out to the previous owners and ask them if they know the security code.If you only got the radio at the time of the purchase, ask the first owner if they still have the manual or the warranty card with them.Get in Touch with Kenwood Service CenterIf all else fails for unlocking a Kenwood radio, you might have to get in touch with the manufacturer itself. Reach out to the Kenwood service center and tell them about your conundrum.Keep in mind that Kenwood won't provide you with the security code just because you have called them and told them the serial number. This doesn't tell Kenwood whether you are an original owner or a petty thief trying to make their plundered stuff work.Therefore, you have to establish proof of your ownership of Kenwood. If you are able to satisfy Kenwood representatives on their queries about your ownership, they will provide you with the security code to unlock your car radio if you need to reset your Kenwood head unit see all the methods explained here.Connected articles: Four digit security codes protect Kenwood car stereos from theft. Unfortunately, many legitimate owners are also locked out of their Kenwood car stereos due to these security codes. This typically happens to people who buy used cars from people who forget to share the security code. However, it also happens to people who simply forget their security codes after several years. Common Kenwood Security Codes Many Kenwood radios are configured with the same security codes: KCAR - This seems to be a "backdoor" to some Kenwood models. 3051 - This is the security code that is printed in many Kenwood model manuals. 1234 - This is a security code that Kenwood owners commonly choose. Entering the Kenwood Security Code If the car battery fails or is disconnected, the Kenwood will ask for the security code. The procedure for entering the security code differs on various models of Kenwood car stereos. Here are three of the more common procedures: Type 1 During the code request mode, while pressing the DISP key, press and hold the Volume UP or DOWN key for 3 seconds until the "... " display disappears. Enter the security code with the Kenwood remote. Type 2 Press the "Auto" button and "Track up" on the face of radio at the same time until the four dash lines disappear. Enter the security code with the Kenwood remote. Type 3: Model# DPX-4020 and DPX-4030 Press and hold the 1 then the 6 preset keys until the display shows the letter C. Enter the security code with the Kenwood remote. Entering Letters with a Kenwood Remote To enter a letter with a Kenwood remote, press a button once for the first letter, twice for the second letter, and three times for the third letter. Press the Track Up or Next Track key to send the letter. To send the letter A, press the 2 key once then press the Track Up key. To send the letter B, press the 2 key twice then press the Track up key. Finally, when all of the letters are entered, press and hold the Track Up button for 3 seconds. The key sequence to enter the security code KCAR is: 5 5 Track Up 2 2 2 Track Up 2 Track Up 7 7 Track Up The Kenwood should then enter tuner mode. A Security Code Bug in Some Kenwoods There is a reported bug in the security code handling of some Kenwood stereos. In models with the bug, the security code is stored incorrectly. The workaround is to enter the wrong security code. In models with this bug, decrement the third character of the security code by one. For example, if the security code is 1111, enter it as 1101. If the security code is 9999, enter 9989. Finding the Kenwood Security Code There are backdoor codes for each Kenwood car stereo, based on the model and serial numbers. Find out how to reset the code or what the common backdoor codes are here (among solutions). Sending the RadioBack to Kenwood If all else fails, send the stereo back to Kenwood to have the security code reset.
